

GOD

Slightly less than 14 billion years ago, all matter, and energy came into existence. In that beginning, the universe was confined to a sphere slightly more than 62 centimeters in diameter, with a mass in excess of  $5.925 \times 10^{70}$  kilograms. The universe at this point was matter and energy in its purest and most fundamental form. It had consciousness. This was God—a singular entity that was composed of all that is known to have existed. God came to consciousness as His body coalesced, with no apparent cause or reason.

Even though such things as sexual reproduction had yet to come into existence, God had thoughts and behavioral tendencies leaning towards logic and aggressiveness. He is therefore masculine in nature, and called in the masculine form.

In the beginning (and today), God lacked senses as we understand them. The universe did not have eyes and was therefore blind. He lacked a nervous system and therefore could neither taste, touch, nor hear. God did not have an olfactory capability and as a result could not smell. In the beginning, since there was nothing to see, hear, touch, taste, or smell, these lackings were immaterial.

In the beginning, God had absolutely no knowledge. He was effectively an infant, but possessed a near infinite ability to learn. In the first moments, He thought of nearly an endless amount of questions in
